

Deep Love Tarot Reading

Find Clarity in Your Relationships

Let's Connect the Dots.

Jane Doe

1980-06-01

09:18

Raleigh, North Carolina

Welcome!

I thank you for your trust, Jane Doe, in allowing me to walk you through your readings. It is a privilege for me to accompany you in your self-discovery and growth journey. What I offer you through readings is not a fixed prediction, but rather perspective and inspiration that will help you navigate life with more clarity.

Both tarot and oracle cards mirror one's psyche and provide abstract images with meanings. My interpretations will always be constructive, however, I do encourage you looking at them differently. Follow your own intuition for it will always guide you the best, Jane Doe. Accept what resonates to you and reject what does not!

Every journey is unique, and in case these sessions become a means for you to uncover life's intricacies, so be it. If you do not find these useful, have the confidence in yourself to navigate it all. Wishing you countless opportunities to reflect deeper while having a constructive journey filled with growth, wisdom, and sharp energy.

Querent Details

Name	Jane Doe
Date	1980-06-01
Time	09:18
Place	Raleigh, North Carolina
Current Location	Portland, Oregon

Cards Drawn

The Hanged Man (Upright)

The Empress (Reversed)

Page of Wands (Upright)

Seven of Swords (Upright)

Four of Wands (Reversed)

King of Cups (Reversed)

Ten of Cups (Upright)

Question 1:

Please guide us, Divine Spirit, to reveal the deeper energetic and emotional dynamics between the woman born on June 1, 1980, at 9:18 a.m. in Raleigh, North Carolina, currently living in Portland, Oregon, and the man born on March 10, 1975, in Miami, Florida. What soul-level purpose or lesson does this relationship carry in Jane's current chapter of life?

Card Drawn:

The Hanged Man (Upright)

Interpretation:

Jane, The Hanged Man upright brings in a pause – not in the sense of things being stuck, but in the sense of things needing to breathe. This connection with John is here to shift your perspective – big time. You're not being asked to chase or fix anything... you're being asked to see differently. This bond carries a lesson in surrender – in allowing yourself to be held, to not have all the answers right away, and to trust the unfolding, even when it's slow or confusing. It's about letting go of old ways of showing up in love that drained you before, and stepping into something gentler, more aligned.

John's energy feels steady but cautious – like he's still figuring out how to show up fully while you're navigating so much emotionally and physically. And honestly, Jane, this is a relationship that's asking both of you to pause and listen – not just to each other, but to yourselves. There's something deeply spiritual here... not always easy, but meaningful. You're learning to receive instead of overextending, to ask for what you need without guilt (!!). It's growth through stillness – through those quiet, in-between moments that don't look like much, but feel like everything.

Don't be surprised if things stay low and reflective through late July. That's not a bad thing – it's actually the space where deeper trust starts to grow. You're not being tested – you're being re-aligned. This isn't about rushing toward an outcome... it's about letting the connection stretch without snapping. And Jane – you're doing that beautifully.

Question 2:

Please guide us, Divine Spirit, to show how Jane and John's connection is likely to grow or shift in the months ahead. Will this relationship continue to deepen into something lasting and mutually supportive?

Card Drawn:The Empress (Reversed)

Interpretation:

Jane, The Empress reversed suggests that the connection between you and John does have the roots to grow - but right now, it's asking for a different kind of care. This isn't about pushing or constantly giving... it's about allowing space to receive, to be supported, and to feel safe in that. You've been carrying a lot emotionally (and physically, too), and the energy around this relationship hints that it could deepen - but not by you holding all the emotional weight. If it's going to last, it needs more balance... more mutual nourishment.

John may not always know how to show up emotionally - not because he doesn't care, but because he might be unsure how to handle vulnerability, especially when someone he cares for isn't at full strength. That doesn't mean he'll leave or disconnect... but it does mean he needs to step into a more active, heart-forward role. The opportunity for something lasting is here - but only if both of you lean in with honesty and softness, not fear or guesswork. Otherwise, it risks feeling one-sided or like something's always just slightly out of reach.

Watch for things to shift more clearly around late August. That's when emotional clarity could break through the fuzziness. In the meantime, Jane - don't be afraid to speak your needs out loud (!!). You don't have to earn love by being endlessly strong. This season is calling you to rest and receive... and yes, you're worthy of that kind of love, too.

Question 3:

Please guide us, Divine Spirit, to offer insight into how John is truly feeling during this time as Jane faces health challenges. What emotions or concerns may he be holding back, and how can Jane feel more supported in this season?

Card Drawn:

Page of Wands (Upright)

Interpretation:

Jane, the Page of Wands upright shows that John genuinely cares – there's curiosity, warmth, and a desire to be close, but he may not quite know how to hold space for something as heavy as what you're going through. His heart's in it, but his emotional tools? Still kind of developing. He feels the shift in your energy, and while it doesn't scare him off, it does make him second-guess how to show up. There's this mix of "I want to help!" and "What if I mess this up?" running through him. He's not distant out of coldness – he's just unsure where to step.

He may be holding back fears of not being enough in this moment – not knowing if he can be the kind of support you really need. That hesitation might come off as distraction or lightness, but underneath it is a nervous heart that actually wants to stay connected. It's okay to name what you need, even if it feels awkward. He won't always read between the lines... but he will listen if you speak from the heart (!!). You're not a burden, Jane – you're giving him the chance to show up in a real, meaningful way.

To feel more supported right now, try creating small moments of honesty – even short check-ins where you share how you're doing or what feels hard today. Don't wait for him to guess. And watch for some emotional warmth or encouragement around early September – something small he does might hit you right in the chest in the best way. Let it in. You deserve care, not just love – real care.

Question 4:

Please guide us, Divine Spirit, to illuminate whether this relationship can evolve into a long-term, stable, and emotionally fulfilling partnership - especially as Jane moves through a more vulnerable phase in her life.

Card Drawn:Seven of Swords (Upright)

Interpretation:

Jane, the Seven of Swords upright shows that while there's a strong connection here, there are also things being held back - and not just on his side. There's some unspoken tension, little moments where honesty gets watered down to "keep the peace" or avoid discomfort. That doesn't mean the relationship can't grow into something lasting... but it does mean truth has to lead the way, especially now when you're navigating so much. This energy isn't about betrayal - it's about avoidance. Emotional side-stepping won't build the foundation you truly need, especially while you're feeling this vulnerable.

John may not be fully comfortable with emotional depth just yet - or maybe he's still trying to figure out how to support someone without losing his own grounding. But here's the thing... long-term love can't live in half-truths. It needs full presence - even the messy, raw kind. If this relationship is going to evolve into something real and stable, it'll require both of you to drop the mask a little more. That's scary - but it's also where the real magic happens. No more guessing games, no more polite silence. Say what's true (!!).

Mid-September could bring a moment where things are laid bare - a convo, a decision, or even a small "oops" that exposes what's been brewing underneath. Don't fear it, Jane - welcome it. The truth won't break this connection... it might just be what saves it. You deserve love that sees all of you - even the parts you're still figuring out.

Question 5:

Please guide us, Divine Spirit, to reveal any unseen blocks, fears, or emotional wounds within the relationship that may need healing, and how Jane can best approach these with care and awareness.

Card Drawn:Four of Wands (Reversed)

Interpretation:

Jane, the Four of Wands reversed speaks to something subtle but powerful – the longing for security and belonging, but feeling like the emotional “home” in the relationship is still a bit shaky. There may be fear on both sides around truly settling in – not just physically, but emotionally. It’s like the groundwork has been started, but the foundation isn’t fully poured yet. A part of you wants to relax into it, to feel held... while another part stays on alert, waiting for the rug to slip. That tension can block deeper connection without even meaning to.

For John, there may be some hidden worry around commitment – not in the classic “fear of commitment” way, but more in the sense of “can I really do this right?” He might not say it out loud, but it sits in the background, influencing how open or steady he feels at times. And for you? There’s a quiet ache for consistency... for someone who doesn’t just show up, but stays. The emotional wound here isn’t from now – it feels older. And it’s asking to be seen and soothed, not ignored.

Start small: create rituals together – even tiny ones, like weekly check-ins or shared meals without distractions. These help build emotional safety without pressure (!!). Around mid to late October, something may shift that brings this more into the open. When it does, Jane, speak from your heart, not your fear. The healing won’t come all at once, but piece by piece... and you’re already halfway there.

Question 6:

Please guide us, Divine Spirit, to show how Jane's current health journey may be influencing her heart, confidence, and capacity for connection. How can she stay emotionally strong and open while also honoring her need for rest and healing?

Card Drawn:King of Cups (Reversed)

Interpretation:

Jane, the King of Cups reversed shows that your current health journey is tugging at your emotional core - more than you may even realize. It's not just your body that's tired... your heart feels stretched too. You're usually the one who holds space for others, who keeps things steady - but now, the roles have shifted. And that can feel weird, even a little scary. There's a quiet grief in not being able to show up how you normally do - but please hear this: you are still deeply lovable, even in your most unsteady moments. (!!)

This energy also shows that you may be suppressing some feelings - not out of denial, but out of trying to stay "strong." But strength right now looks different. It's in the asking. The softening. The allowing. If you try to power through emotionally the same way you always have, you'll end up more drained than supported. Let yourself feel it all - the fear, the frustration, the longing - without judgment. You don't have to be calm all the time to be grounded. You just have to be real. And real is more than enough.

One thing to try? Give yourself space to express what you're feeling without editing it. Journal it. Speak it. Cry it out. And when someone asks how you are, don't just say "I'm okay" if you're not. Around late September, expect a wave of emotional release - something that lets you breathe a little easier. You're not breaking down... you're breaking open. Let that be your medicine, Jane.

Question 7:

Please guide us, Divine Spirit, to share what Jane most needs to know right now about her love path - including whether this relationship with John is aligned with her long-term emotional wellbeing and spiritual growth.

Card Drawn:Ten of Cups (Upright)

Interpretation:

Jane, the Ten of Cups upright is such a beautiful and affirming energy - it shows that your heart is aligned with something real, something deeply fulfilling. This doesn't mean everything is perfect or without effort, but it absolutely speaks to the potential for true emotional contentment. The connection you have with John holds the ingredients for long-term happiness - shared joy, emotional growth, and even a sense of spiritual partnership. The key now is making sure it's being built on truth, not just hope. You're not reaching for a dream - you're standing in it, piece by piece (!!).

This card is a gentle nudge that your love path isn't broken or lost - it's unfolding, even when it feels uncertain. The timing may have been bumpy, and the path hasn't always been straight... but the intention behind it is clear. You want something lasting, not just romantic highs - and that's exactly where you're headed if you stay true to yourself. John might still be catching up in some ways emotionally, but there is love here - and it's not one-sided. The emotional potential between you two is strong, but it needs care, honesty, and room to grow naturally.

Look toward early November - there's a window of deeper clarity, maybe even a moment where things align more clearly than they have in weeks. In the meantime, Jane, trust your heart... not your fear. You're not off track. You're just being guided toward something deeper than surface-level love. And guess what? You're already walking it.

Summary

Jane, the overall energy between you and John shows a connection with real depth - but one that needs room to breathe, shift, and settle into something more sustainable. There's love here, yes, and the potential for something long-lasting... but it's not all about romance. It's about learning how to feel safe while being seen, especially now that you're moving through a vulnerable chapter. There are moments of quiet disconnect, where things feel slightly off or out of sync - and those aren't failures. They're just signs that both of you are still learning how to show up fully, without the mask (!!).

Your health journey has added a layer of emotional weight that's influencing how open and confident you feel in love. It's natural - when the body feels fragile, the heart gets protective too. But that doesn't mean you're weak or "too much" - it means you're human. John may not always know exactly what you need, but he's not checked out. He's just finding his own emotional footing, sometimes clumsily. This connection can absolutely grow stronger... as long as honesty becomes the glue, not guessing games or silence. The love path you're on is still unfolding - don't rush it, and don't settle either.

By late October into November, things could open up emotionally in a new way - a convo, a moment of understanding, or even just a shift in energy that brings relief. You're not stuck, Jane - you're evolving. Keep speaking up, trusting your body, and giving yourself space to feel it all. This love has legs... but more importantly, you have roots.

Remedies:

For you, Jane, consider working with blue lace agate – a gentle, calming stone that supports communication and emotional release. Keep it close when you're feeling overwhelmed or struggling to express yourself. Holding it during moments of stress can help center your thoughts and ease tension in the body.

Bring the color soft blue or seafoam green into your daily environment. These shades help calm the nervous system and create emotional openness. Try using a blue pillowcase, wearing a scarf in that tone, or even lighting a pale green candle during journaling or quiet reflection.

Repeat this affirmation daily – in the mirror if you can: I deserve a love that holds me gently, sees me clearly, and meets me where I am. Say it especially on days when you're feeling uncertain or tired – let it be an anchor, not a performance.

Try a weekly “release ritual” – write down any fears or emotions that built up during the week, then safely burn or tear the paper. Do this on Sundays to clear out energy before the week begins. This simple act can shift stuck emotions and help you feel lighter moving forward.

Best Wishes

I want to extend my heartfelt thanks to you Jane Doe for permitting me to assist you in your journey through these readings!. I value the effort and energy you have put forth, attempting to find some form of insight or reflection. But always, remember that the messages received are to help guide you towards inspiration and encourage self awareness, and that it is still your own choices that determine what action to take.

Your own intuition is your ability to understand things clearly, therefore trust yourself and align with your own wisdom. As you may know, the universe works in mysterious ways, and every answer that needs to be given will provide itself at the right moment. Keep your heart and mind wide open as you continue.

When your need guidance, please do not forget that I will be here ready and willing to provide support and insight. Nevertheless, I wish you the best in every aspect of life as you continue on this journey. Once again, I thank you Jane Doe and I wish you light and wisdom to stride upon during your journey.